Vinod Khanna - Box Office Collections, Rating | IMDb., on the contrary, we do not think that the evidence is overwhelming in either direction. The testimony of the arresting officer was that when he saw defendant for the first time in the courtroom he looked "cold and callous" and "remained calm and composed." The judge at the preliminary hearing was careful to allow defense counsel to question the officer. The judge did not accept the officer's testimony that defendant had made a direct statement to him at the time of the arrest. He did not find that the officer had a "good and honest" motive in making the arrest and "nothing to gain" from testifying. The *684 charge was reduced from murder to manslaughter and the lesser charge was tried to the jury. It is clear that the trial judge made his own evaluation of the circumstances and in the process could well have drawn conclusions as to the credibility of the witness, and we cannot substitute our judgment for that of the trial court. Such credibility is for the trial court's determination. Such is the nature of a trial. If the conclusion be that there was error, it was harmless. Moreover, even if the court should have considered the evidence outside the presence of the jury, it would be highly improbable that defendant could have obtained a more favorable result from the jury's determination. It is obvious that the judge who had observed defendant's appearance in the courtroom and his manner of speaking would have paid much greater attention 82157476af
